Game Boy Advance ROMs

The Game Boy Advance is a portable game console released in 2001 by Nintendo. It was the first Game Boy successor to use the Super Game Boy system, a new cartridge port with an extension battery, and had 64 MB of RAM with 512 KB ROM. Cartridge

The game cartridge was black with a bright blue Nintendo logo. The cartridge slot is of a different design to the one used on the original Game Boy and Game Boy Color, and is rounded at the corners to increase mechanical durability. The game cartridges are thinner than their Game Boy counterparts, and have a slightly different texture than the original Game Boy cartridges. The Game Boy Advance has 48 hardware addresses that can be used to interact with the system, although this is far less than the original Game Boy's 48 hardware addresses and the Game Boy Color's 64 hardware addresses. The game cartridges were not designed to be easily replaceable by the user. Speakers and processing

The Game Boy Advance uses two 2-inch JVC-manufactured speakers located on the lower front and rear of the system. The speakers produced an output with a frequency response from 39 Hz to 10 kHz and a maximum volume of 50 mW. The system's cartridge slot supports A/V (Audio/Video) playback, which allows the Game Boy Advance to play sound recordings, video, and TV programs saved on a memory card inserted into the slot. It can also record sound, picture, and data to a memory card. The system also has an infrared port to allow the
